A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE HOTEL.....

The Hotel was built in 1898 to accommodate the rush of visitors viewing the construction of the Weir, and for the men working on the Weir. Sly grog had been discovered on the site and the three-man police force stationed at the Weir were keen to get alcohol sales under control. The Jacoby brothers built a single storey building called the Reservoir Hotel. The building was situated adjacent to the railway line on the first piece of freehold next to the weir easement. In 1906, Fred Jacoby constructed a two-storey building as part of the Hotel and renamed it the Goldfields Weir Hotel.

A railway was initially constructed from Mundaring to the Weir for goods transport only, so the Licensee would pick visitors up from Mundaring station by horse and buggy. Later there were two weekly trains from Perth. The last stop before the Weir, opposite the hall, was called Karda Mordo. The beer kegs for the Hotel would be unloaded here and rolled down the hill to the hotel. The invoices from the Swan Brewery are still addressed to Mundaring Weir Hotel, Karda Mordo. The railway line closed in 1952. During the Second World War the Weir was considered an enemy target and guards were posted. The roof of the Hotel was painted dark and part of the cellar was made into a bomb shelter with access from the ballroom above. The shelter is now the kitchen for the down stairs Café.

The current owner/operator, Jens Jorgensen, bought the Hotel in 1984.
